7.3 Indicative Module Content, Organisation and Structure

This course delves into the multifaceted emergence of cities in nineteenth-century America. It explores the interplay of race narratives, industrialisation, urbanisation and ethnic communities. Through a critical lens, learners will examine the socio-cultural, economic and political forces that shaped American cities during this transformative era. Learners will discover and analyse the influence of ideologies such as Manifest Destiny on urban expansion and consider their ethical implications on indigenous populations, immigrants and urban development more broadly. By analysing primary sources, historical texts and case studies, learners will gain a deep understanding of complex cityscapes in nineteenth-century America. Throughout, a comparative approach which highlights regional variations will be employed to understand the diversity that characterised nineteenth-century America. The course will be thematic in nature and consider, in its broadest sense, the following themes: introduction – constructing the city; the early cities; displacement, westward expansion, abolition, urbanisation after the civil war, immigration and ethnic neighbourhoods, nativism, race and the city, social reform movements and the role of women in cities.

7.6 Application of programme teaching, learning and assessment strategies to this module

The teaching and learning strategy for this module is learner-centered and interactive. Each session will be two hours, the first of which will be a traditional lecture followed by a seminar/workshop session led by the learners and focused on the use of primary source material. Teaching methods employed will include flipped classroom, peer reflection and group work among others.

The VLE will be extremely important in supporting, guiding and facilitating learner-centered learning. This resource will be populated with lecture notes, supplementary reading, relevant podcasts and documentaries, online resources and digitized primary source material.
