Rationale for Inclusion of the Module in the Programme and its Contribution to the Overall IPLOs	This module provides an introduction to concepts of community and the development of social and political theories of community. This is a foundational module supporting learners to develop their knowledge and understanding of the significant characteristics of communities in diverse contexts. The module is relevant to the overall intended programme learning outcomes in that it seeks to develop learner awareness and understanding of the nature of community from a range of perspectives.
Module Aims and Objectives	The module examines the concept of community and introduces theories of community from sociological and political perspectives. The changing nature of community in Ireland is explored from historical and contemporary positions. The module will also consider different models of communities (individualistic, collaborative, identity, virtual) and their relevance to mainstream society.
Minimum Module Learning Outcomes	On successful completion of this module, learners should be able to: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> <li>1. Discuss core social and political concepts of community. (MIPLO 1,3)</li> <li>2. Outline the changing nature of communities in Ireland, from traditional to contemporary. (MIPLO 2, 3)</li> <li>3. Differentiate between the features of communities such as individualistic, materialistic, communal and ecological. (MIPLO 3)</li> <li>4. Define civil society and discuss related perspectives. (MIPLO 2, 3)</li> </ol>
